Building Permits Reveal April "Busiest" For Local Construction

Building permits issued in Appomattox county passed the $30,-000 mark in May bringing the yearly total to $240,235, thus far.

This compares with a similar figure, $244,009 for 1963, according to the Commissioner of Revenue, John Curtis Caldwell. Caldwell explained that figures for any given month may reflect buildings begun months or years before that time, and that likewise, some present day permits are for unfinished construction work, and construction still in the planning stage.

April is normally the "busiest month" as reflected in twelve permits for $144,375 in April of '64 and a like number the year before, totaling $105,450. May's total this year was $34,860 for three permits. Section 58-766 Code of Virginia requires that a building permit be secured from the Commissioner of Revenue for any repair, addition, or new building which costs $500 or more.

Breakdown of '64 figures shows $17,500 for Jan.; none, Feb.; $45,500, March; $144,375, April; and $34,860, May. For 1963: none, Jan.; none, Feb.; $51,450, Mar.; $105,450, April; $87,100, May.

Farmers Free To Sell '64 Wheat

Under the 1964 wheat program, as in the past, a farmer may sell his wheat production to anyone at any price he can get, J. A. Martin, Chairman, Agricultural Stallization and Conservation County Committee, said today. This applies whether or not a farmer is cooperating with the program and whether or not he is eligible for marketing certificates.

The Chairman pointed out that neither the domestic nor the export certificates will follow the price of wheat. Instead, the farmer will receive the value of the certificates at the ASCS county office as a part of the program designed to bolster farmers' income from wheat.

The domestic certificates are valued at 70 cents per bushel, and they apply to the domestic portion of the farm's marketing allocation; the export certifibushel and apply to the export portion of the allocation. These certificates — as well as wheat available to wheat growers who participate in all provisions of the 1964 wheat program.

A grower who keeps his wheat acreage within his farm allotment will be eligible for a price-support loan on his entire wheat crop, based on a national average of $1.30 per bushel. The rate in Virginia has been announced as $1.43 to $1.46, varying by counties.

Thus, the total of the loan rate and the domestif certificate will price 1964 crop wheat for domestic consumption at from $2.13 to $2.16 per bushel in Virginia. The price producers are expected to receive for the export portion of their allocation will be from $1.68 to $1.71 per bushel in Virginia (including export certificates), which is about the world market price.

Mr. Martin points out that the farm marketing allocation will provide certificates for the smaller of 90 per cent (45 per cent for domestic and 45 per cent for export) of the normal production of the farm's acreage allotment or the normal yield of the acreage planted for harvest if this is less. If the lesser figure applies, the amount of export certificates will be reduced first. There will be no reduction of the domestic certificates unless the acreage planted for harvest is below 45 per cent of the allotment.
